

TRACCIA INGLESE NON ESTRATTA

1) It must be said that historically the relations between Great Britain and the European Union have never been so idyllic, or that at least this idyll has not been constant over time: it seems ironic that the first politician to propose a union among the European states was Winston Churchill who had this intuition in the immediate post-war period, with the will to emerge from the violence of the Second World War, in the name of a political and economic stability of the European continent, an idea shared by politicians at that time, and which became soon reality.
